UWAZI

(from Swahili)
'openness'

Capture and organise collections of information on human rights violations and more with Uwazi.

A versatile, web-based database application designed to manage collections of information, including documents, evidence, cases and complaints.

Uwazi also uses machine learning to make certain pieces of human rights information even more accessible.

uwazi.io

Advocate for justice and accountability by documenting and preserving the truth

What can you do with Uwazi?

Collect & Categorise

- Data can include loose text, images, various media files and documents
- Add context, create templates to categorise
- Use relationships to track complex cases

Store & Analyse

- Store large amount of information
- Decide what is public or private
- Search and filter subsets
- Analyse content with graphics, tables & maps

Collaborate & Protect

- Gather information from public forms
- Choose what you want to share
- Monitor changes made in the database
- Add extra layers of security

Assess & Showcase

- Build a public version
- Tell stories with data
- Export information to an interoperable format
- Privately share for advocacy, litigation & accountability

Who can use Uwazi?

UWAZI

Uwazi can be customised for a variety of needs and users, and is already being used by:

- Human rights defenders
- Journalists
- Academics
- Researchers
- Museum workers & curators
- Librarians
- Archivists
- Educators
- Lawyers
- Open knowledge activists

300+ collections and growing!

Over 150 human rights organisations rely on Uwazi as a document, entity or asset management system to create public and private databases.

> I am in love with Uwazi and grateful for HURIDOCS' technical support and human-oriented approach. Uwazi is an amazing tool that helps us to highlight tendencies, something that can be easily overlooked in our research project.

– Amanita Calderón-Cifuentes
HIV Research and Advocacy Officer, TGEU

Uwazi is developed and constantly improved by an in-house team of software engineers at HURIDOCS, a global NGO that for the past 40 years has been helping human rights groups gather, organise and use information to create positive change in the world.

Find out more about Uwazi here

huridocs
human rights information and documentation systems

hello@huridocs.org huridocs.org